For Alison Pickart, her side hustle happened serendipitously. The interior designer was heading to a wedding and was in need of a great piece of jewelry. When her search left her empty-handed, Pickart was inspired to create her own line.

"In the interiors work I do, the 'final product' gratification can take years to get to. All of a sudden, this was an outlet to conceive of something, execute it, and have the final product all in short order," she shares.

Today, her line the Frippery Collection sells statement necklaces made with attention-grabbing stones, crystals, and beading.
